Dear all:

Here in the US, some states have been hit much harder than others so things such as “stay at home” or “work from home” orders and school and business closings are presently managed on a state by state basis. That said, the US Government has asked all Americans to adopt social distancing measures (stay at home when possible, avoid non-essential travel, etc.) until May 1. That date may change. Much international passenger travel has been restricted including across land borders with Mexico and Canada (they are still open to commercial traffic). Freight forwarders and customs brokers have been deemed essential businesses so they remain open although many of their employees that do not physically handle freight are working remotely. Freight is moving internationally but some ocean terminals are working reduced hours due to diminished freight flows. Airfreight underdeck capacity has been reduced internationally due to restrictions on passenger flights.

The following is a link to a newsletter that we sent to clients recently that discusses COVID-19: <https://www.avalonrisk.com/COVID19Quest.html>

Stay healthy everyone and I look forward to seeing you all again soon when this is all over!

Best Regards,
Mike
